

The Left still doesn't have a clue concerning guns

Stahler's cartoon on The Herald's April 20 Opinion page again reveals the Left's confusion concerning guns.

It showed a youngster watching Leave It To Beaver. Seeing Beaver and a buddy talk of biking to the park to play ball excites the youngster, who exclaims, "Boy that sounds like fun!"

His dad nearby with his nose buried in the newspaper retorts, "Not without a parent!"

Only three large words are conspicuously written on the outer pages of the newspaper, offering the obvious basis for his dad's concern—"Stalkers," "Crime," "Guns."

Hmmm, why would amoral objects like guns be connected with two immoral actions?

Stahler apparently feels guns are a major threat for children playing alone outside.

Actually, most assaults / abductions of children are not by those brandishing guns; rather such creeps are more likely to brandish candy, since you don't need a gun to abduct a child.

What really should have been the third statement on the newspaper? How about "Soft Sentencing,"?

Just recently in California a serial rapist was put on probation yet again, which has residents in a furor.

Ask them if guns are the issue — I bet more are carrying guns there now!

I grew up in Kansas in a tiny one-intersection town where we rode bikes all over without fear.

Years after moving away I heard the child next door was raped and strangled by a fellow without a gun and on probation.

The murderer got a 15-year sentence and was later paroled.

Guns are a convenient target for liberals rather than facing up to the many ridiculous notions and policies that they have pushed on us.

The world of Leave It To Beaver wasn't perfect, but the left's influence has ruined many things that were better.
