

The horrors just keep coming. Planned Parenthood thought it was putting pro-life hero Sandra Merritt on trial. The truth is, Planned Parenthood is putting itself on trial.

That's because of the gruesome information coming out as witnesses testify, under oath, about the abortion giant's ghoulish business of selling body parts cut or torn from the little babies it kills.

What we heard just a few days ago is some of the most disturbing information yet. I share details below.

Thanks to friends like you, Liberty Counsel is defending Sandra against Planned Parenthood's ruthless civil suit demanding millions from the 66-year-old grandmother.

With more than 60 witnesses, the trial in San Francisco may go eight weeks and is extremely expensive. The total cost will hit the high six figures. It's our most expensive case ever.

Abortionist Dr. Mary ("I want a Lamborghini") Gatter testified yesterday in Planned Parenthood's baseless civil suit demanding millions from citizen journalist Sandra Merritt. Sandra courageously went undercover to expose gruesome details on camera about how Planned Parenthood sells body parts harvested from its tiny human victims.

In one undercover video, Gatter dickers with Sandra over how much Sandra's fictitious firm, BioMax, would pay for human tissue. "I just don't want to lowball," insists Gatter, then medical director at Planned Parenthood Los Angeles, before tentatively agreeing to $100 per specimen. And then she said, "I want a Lamborghini."

Yesterday in court, Gatter admitted that Planned Parenthood Los Angeles was "used to getting a set fee for each specimen" harvested. A few days earlier, we learned more in court about one kind of "specimen" cut from the infants Planned Parenthood kills.

Harvesting baby scalps

Albin Rhomberg, a former board director for the Center for Medical Progress, the group Sandra worked with to expose Planned Parenthood, revealed shocking details on the witness stand last week.

He said sidewalk counselors outside abortion facilities observed staff arriving with ice, containers, and other equipment. A few hours later, FedEx trucks arrived and departed with "special refrigerated gel-pack containers." By chatting with the drivers and doing online research, Rhomberg concluded that fetal tissue procurement firm Advanced Bioscience Resources was the middleman for researchers doing a study on baldness. And for that they needed human scalps. Baby scalps.

Rhomberg told the court:

"They were scalping the babies and taking their scalps and grafting them on to immune-suppressed mice, and then using various pharmaceuticals on these humanized mice to test the effect upon preventing or, I suppose you might say, treating baldness."

And collecting scalps, if you will, is not unique to Advanced Bioscience Resources. Another organ procurement firm, StemExpress, which formerly partnered with Planned Parenthood to harvest baby body parts, did the same.

Scalps for sale online

Gruesome as it is, StemExpress offered baby body parts for sale online. Its website included an order form with drop-down menus enabling its clients to request "organs and tissues" from unborn children ranging in age from 4 to 20 weeks gestation.

The list of some 86 body parts for sale included brain, heart, lungs, liver, sternum, skull, and scalp.

And yet it's not Planned Parenthood or Stem Express that's facing criminal prosecution in California. It's pro-life hero Sandra Merritt.

Fighting on two fronts

Sandra is fighting felony charges leveled against her by California Attorney General Xavier ("I stand with Planned Parenthood") Becerra. And she's facing financial ruin as she fights Planned Parenthood's civil suit demanding millions from the 66-year-old grandmother. Sandra is fighting for her future and her freedom.

This is a crucial fight -- for Sandra, for the unborn and for the very soul of our nation. And the costs are enormous. Because the trial is in San Francisco, may go eight weeks and will have more than 60 witnesses, it is extremely expensive. The cost for voluminous trial exhibits alone will go into the tens of thousands. The total cost will reach the high six figures.
